PREAMBLE

The Committee for Free and Fair Elections in Cambodia (COMFREL) serves to promote democracy and citizen’s participation in the spirit of building capacity for nationwide networking and cooperation with its member organizations and partners. Democracy is not just about elections, but free and fair elections as they are a necessary condition of democracy. COMFREL is also a member of Women for All, working together to promote women’s participation in politics and decision-making at national, sub-national and local levels in promoting positive change for democratic women’s participation through women’s capacity development, advocacy and lobby the political party leaders, the government to formulate policies and laws to increase number of women’s political representation at all levels.

The report on “The Empowerment of Women in Politics and the 6th Legislature National Assembly Elections 2018” is an analysis of the data and views of Cambodian women’s participation in politics, especially the process of the 6th Legislature National Assembly (NA) Elections 2018.

This report looks in particular at the women’s political empowerment and elections; number of women candidates, measures for how to select women candidates, policies of political parties for promoting women’s political participation, political party platforms on women’s and children’s issues, challenges facing women both as voters and candidates including violence against women in politics. Also, it shows about women’s opinions on electoral progress, and activities related to promoting women’s participation in politics as well as the outcome of elected women representative from the single party CPP which dominated the election and the outcome. It also provides an overview of a rapid survey on “The reason of women voters who voted or have indelible ink on their finger and women voters who did not go to vote or have no indelible ink on their finger” conducted by Women Volunteer Citizens throughout the four provincial target area of COMFREL a day after the election and two case studies. The report closes with a set of recommendations to improve gender equality and women’s political empowerment in Cambodia.

COMFREL hope that this report is of importance and useful for many stakeholders in the fields of women’s affairs and politics, especially government officials, member of parliament, political parties, staff of associations and non-governmental organizations, representatives of development partners, researchers and academics among others, to help with their work promoting women to become involved in politics and decision-making level.

Special acknowledgement goes to the COMFREL team, namely Mrs. Sonket Sereyleak who is the author of this report. She also supervise her team, Mrs. Eim Sivutha and all female volunteer citizens who implemented the action plan regarding the collection of data, translated from Khmer to English, designed and decorated the report with support of COMFREL’s provincial secretaries. We would also like to thank Mr. Koul Panha and Mr. Kim Chhorn for their support and feedback which further improved the quality of this report. Last but not least, I would also like to fabulous thanks Mr. Kevin Nauen who helped edit the English version.

I. Introduction

As a result of the 2018 National Assembly (NA) Elections, women politicians and activists of the main opposition party (Cambodian National Rescue Party-CNRP) were disempowered and obstructed from engaging in the political process and the election because of the dissolution of the main opposition CNRP, ban of women opposition politicians to participate in the 2018 elections, an environment of fear and restrictions to freedom of expression. The result of the NA elections 2018 marked a step backwards for Cambodian democracy, shifting from political pluralism to one-party rule (Cambodian People’s Party or CPP) from controlling the elections and its result. The UN Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Cambodia called into question the “genuineness” of the general elections in July 2018, in which the ruling Cambodian People’s Party won all of the parliamentary seats in the vote. The step backwards removing political pluralism negatively affects the quality of women elected and women’s participation. Political pluralism of gender is an essential element in ensuring the political gender check and balance.

Cambodia continues to exhibit a pronounced inequality of elected women and men representatives. There are only 19 elected female representatives (immediately elected), equaling 15.02%, while the overwhelming percentage of elected male representatives was equal to 84.80% making up 106 of the total 125 parliamentary seats for the 6th legislature National Assembly Elections 2018 (NA Elections). The main cause of this issue is the lack of political will of the political parties with the highest potential and lack of specific written policies, including specific supporting articles of election laws for providing opportunities for women’s equal participation with men in politics, particularly as candidates to be elected. In addition, there are barriers to political activity faced by women, such as financial needs of the parties regarding candidate nomination for election campaigns, discrimination against women during the candidate selection process in the parties. The parties may decide based on the stereotype that placing many female candidates at the top of the list would alienate many voters, following from prejudices common in Cambodian culture, female candidates stand as candidates in constituencies where they were not expected to win the election and male individuals in position did not want to step down etc.

Regarding the financing issue, the Inter-Parliamentary Union (IPU) conducted a survey in 2008 affirming that campaign financing was one of the biggest obstacles faced by women. This was later confirmed in research done by UN Women in 2013, wherein over 80% of respondents identified access to financing as one of the biggest barrier to enter politics.¹

In Cambodia, women have become more involved in political affairs and they were very actively involved in elections process in the last decade, in term of frequency, scope, and voice. On contradiction to this, there is a lack of opportunity for women to stand as candidates and to be elected as a leader. The number of elected female parliamentarians was decreasing continually from the 5th legislature NA elections 2013 to the 6th legislature NA elections 2018. The number of female candidates is still low, despite the increase for the 6th legislature NA elections 2018.

According to the official result of political party registration and list of candidates released by National Election Committee (NEC) on 14 June 2018 for the 6th legislature NA elections there were a total of 1,972 titular candidates from 20 political parties, of which 498 (25.25%) were female. The number of female candidates increased by 6.29% when compared to the 5th legislature of 2013 which had only 168 (18.96%). In the contrast, the number of female candidates from the Cambodian People's Party (CPP), the party with the highest potential to secure office, has decreased. It was the lowest even though this party is leading the government and has obligation to promote and implement the international conventions related to providing opportunities and encouraging for women's equal participation with men. In fact, the CPP had the fewest women candidates with 19 (15.20%) for the 6th legislature of 2018, which slightly decreased by 1.06%, compared to the 5th legislature of 2013 when it had 20 (16.26%). At the same time, some other competing political parties have put up more women candidates over 30-50 percent in some cases. There were 62, equaling 17.81% of female candidates at the 1st rank and this was a slight increase of 1.54%, when compared to the 5th legislature of 2013 which had 16.27%.

The number of elected females as members of parliament (MPs) for the 6th legislature was only 19 (15.20%) [Immediately Elected]² it has significantly decreased by 5.12% (6), when compared to the 5th legislature of 2013 with 25 (20.32%). After the new government was formed, there were 25 (20%) female MPs and the ruling CPP won all of the parliamentary seats in the vote (125 seats). The low number of elected women indicates that Cambodia will be unable to achieve the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) which call for “Achieve Gender Equality and Empower All Women and Girls in the World by 2030” at all levels of decision-making. However, in the 6th legislature NA elections 2018, there was strong criticism from independent civil society organizations, independent analysts, opposition parties, supporter of the main opposition party and the international community asserting that the elections was neither free nor fair. Moreover, there is general agreement among such stakeholders that the systematic attacks on fundamental freedoms will have longstanding impacts, beyond this election cycle and it is necessary to put pressure on the current regime, as in the threat of expulsion from the EU Everything But Arms (EBA) program.³

More attention has to be paid by political parties related to resolving women’s and children’s issues in their political platforms for the 6th legislature National Assembly. Most political parties have considered on women’s and children’s issue such as: implementing the National Policy Framework to Social Protection by funding support and providing free health care to poor people, pregnant women, orphans, elderly people and people with disabilities; strengthening the quality and promoting education by creating more schools from primary school to higher education and providing scholarships to student and poor students and allowing for borrowing money from the government without interest in order to pay for education costs; creating more job opportunities and ensuring the provision of reasonable salaries for youth and young girls who recently graduated or received vocational training; encouraging women to prioritize to essential social work at all levels in all national institutions; promoting Human Rights, right to living wage, freedom of expression, women’s rights, labor rights, gender perspective mainstreaming, and full freedom of participation in political life; eliminate corruption, sexual trafficking of women and children as well as prevent domestic violence, gangsters and drug abuse.

The report below is based on monitoring and analysis conducted by COMFREL staff, female volunteer citizens, and secondary data in the process of NA elections 2018. This report elaborates on issues or challenges, solutions or measures for how to select female candidates, the quantity of female candidates on the party lists, political party platforms on women’s and children’s issues, female election officials at all levels and female voters as well as the outcome of elected women representatives from the single party CPP which dominated the election and the outcome.

³ The European Union officially notified Cambodia that the procedure for the withdrawal of its preferential trade treatment under the ‘Everything But Arms’ (EBA) scheme had already “been launched” by October 6, 2018

II. Women’s Political Participation in the 6th legislature National Assembly Elections 2018

Women's Political Participation in the 6th legislature NA elections 2018 continued to face challenges in terms of having an opportunity to stand as a candidate, voting participation, as well as the opportunity for elected women to advance their political career.

1- Selection of Female Candidates and Candidates Registration of Political Parties

Political activities are restricted and this increases challenges for women to have an opportunity to stand as a candidate in the 2018 NA elections for 6th legislature. Some political parties contesting in this election raised concerns about the financial needs of the parties regarding to candidate nomination and some criteria to stand as candidate such as they have the ability, popularity, level of commitment and established political background. This funding need was for the election campaign. Therefore, some parties required their members to contribute money voluntarily or as much as possible, without limiting the amount of money for the nomination and other parties based it on their top ranking in the party list.

The Beehive Social Democratic Party (BSDP), each candidate can spend as much money as possible, on average between USD 400 to USD 5,000. In the selection of candidates, the BSDP has a policy to increase the number of female parliamentarians through encouraging and training from party leaders, inspiring women to participate in politics without discrimination. However, there are no specific conditions for putting women candidates at the top ranking, just the demand that candidates be struggle and be loyal to the party and the people. As a result, BSDP has put 14 women candidates in the 1st rank in 14 constituencies more than men candidates (which were put in the 1st rank in 11 constituencies) and the total amount of female candidates at 51.20%. Whereas the Dharmacracy Party (DP) is similar to the BSDP, and each candidate does not require lot of money, depending on their ability. The DP has a policy for promoting and increasing the number of women in all fields, especially in politics sector. Therefore, the DP welcomes all women who wish to participate in politics, regardless of their experience, the party will strengthen their capacity through training, and nominated candidates are selected by the President of the party. As a result, the DP had the highest percentage of women candidates at 53.57%.

The Grassroots Democratic Party (GDP) has regular funds in the party. The party members contributed budget dependent on their own ability. Women or men have opportunity to stand as a candidate at the top of the party list without contributing money, depending on ability and level of commitment. The process of candidate selection in the GDP is based on party congress by elections in accord with the candidate’s ability. For women candidates who have not been nominated at the top rank, the party will push some women at the top of the party list from 1st to 3rd rank. Because of the GDP has no clear policy to set the specific number of women candidates, other than selecting candidates based on ability, there are challenges for women to stand as candidates. As a result, the GDP has only 17.60% of female candidates.⁴

The Cambodian People's Party (CPP) with the highest potential for political activities did not act differently principle from the 5th legislature of 2013 in terms of both campaign budgeting and candidate selection.⁵ The candidates contributed money dependent on the candidates’ ranking from 1st to 3rd: around USD 30,000 to USD 60,000 for each candidate. The CPP process of selecting candidates is to nominate candidates by a party member survey in each Commune/Sangkat, District/Khan and Capital/Province level, and results of the survey was examined and approval for the section of female and male candidates for the candidate list of the party is done by the national committee.

The adaptation of this internal principle in the party is causing challenges for female candidates, which many party members lacking confidence in the potential of female candidates, and along hesitancy to spending a lot of money for standing as candidates, as women are competing with men with higher levels of finances, these are huge barriers and challenges for females who were willing to stand for election in the 6th legislature of 2018. For instance, the CPP has only 15.20% of women candidates which was not a significant improvement from the 5th legislature election of 2013. On the other hand, discrimination against women occurred largely during the candidate selection process and nominee elections in the parties. The most important factor is that women do not have sufficient funds to compete with their male counterparts in order to become a candidate and/or to stand at the top of the party lists, no matter how qualified with they are. This is because women are less wealthy than their male counterparts and most of them hold lower positions than their male counterparts,

⁴COMFREL’s interviewed with political party representatives: BSDP, GDP, and DP on “The selection of candidate for the 6th legislature NA Elections 2018”

⁵COMFREL’s Report on “The Empowerment of Women in Politics and the 5th legislature National Assembly Elections 2013” which is why their income is generally lower. Women are more tight-fisted than their male counterparts in spending for political affairs due to factors such as family, financial arrangement, and prioritizing long-term consideration for livelihood of their family. Another factor found is the resistance to a female running at the top of the candidate list, when this would mean excluding their male counterparts. It is almost like a tradition and culture that party leaders and members have always excessively focused on appointment and nomination of male candidates without taking into consideration the participation of women. Therefore, the presence of women candidates at the top list leads to a loss of opportunities for some male candidates and thereby causes discontent among the men for they have to share power with their female counterparts.

Although, some political parties standards for the promotion of women and a policy that candidates should provide money voluntarily, female candidates are still low because these parties are less popular and/or are newly formed and were not expected to perform well in the elections. At the same time, the highest potential party pays less attention to promoting and providing opportunities for women to stand as candidates and fully participate in political affairs.

Unlike the previous elections, in the 6th legislature NA elections, due to restrictions on independent non-governmental organizations and on political rights, active of Civil Society Organizations who were working to promote women in politics, did not have any meetings with key political parties to lobby or propose political parties place women candidates on party lists by alternating male and female candidates. However, some independent civil society organizations such as the Committee for free and Fair Elections in Cambodia (COMFREL), the Cambodian Center for Human Rights (CCHR), the Women’s Media Center of Cambodia (WMC), the Cambodian Center for Independent Media (CCIM) and the Youth Resource Development Program (YRDP) continued radio programming, but with restricted expression. COMFREL has actively advocated and lobbied for gender equality in politics through its radio program by asking to all political parties to place female candidates and male candidates on the candidate list by using sandwich system from the top to bottom, as well as proposing to the National Assembly and the Government that they amend some articles of the Election Laws to ensure gender equality of elected representatives in accordance with the Sustainable Development Goals.

According to the official result of the registration of political parties and list of candidates released by NEC on June 14, 2018 for the 6th legislature NA Elections 2018, there was a total of 1,972 titular candidates from 20 political parties, of which 498 (25.25%) were female. This figure increased by 6.29% when compared to the 5th legislature of 2013 with only 168 (18.96%). However, the number of female candidates is still low, as the overwhelming number of candidates were male.

It should be noted that, the number of female candidates from the Cambodian People's Party (CPP) with the highest potential has decreased and the fewest even though this party is leading the government and has obligation to promote and implement the international conventions related to providing opportunities and encouraging women's equal participation with men. For instance, the CPP had the fewest women candidates with only 19 (15.20%) for the 6th legislature of 2018, which slightly decreased by 1.06% when compared to the 5th legislature of 2013 with 20 (16.26%). At the same time, some other competing political parties have put up a high percentage of women candidates with over 30%-50%.

The regions (provinces/capital) with the higher percentage of women candidates included the provinces of Pailin with 36.36%, Kratie with 35.89%, Kampong Cham with 32.10%, Mondolkiri with 30% and the capital Phnom Penh with 29.82%. Table 2 shows that the number of female candidates to be 62, equaling 17.81% at the 1st rank the 6th legislature of 2018, a slight increased of 1.54% compared to the 5th legislature of 2013 which had 16.27%. The number of female candidates from the 1st to 3rd ranking was 185 (17.72%) out of the total 1,044 candidates, an increase of 5.52% (122) when compared to the 5th legislature of 2013 which had only 63 (12.20%). The number of CPP female candidates from the 1st to 3rd rank decreased 3.17%, from 12.50% in the 5th legislature of 2013 to 9.33% in the 6th legislature of 2018.

2. Elected Women

Female	Percentage (%)	Male	Percentage (%)
Immediately Elected
19	15.20%	106	84.80%
After Forming the New Government
25	20%	100	80%

Table 3 and 4 reveal the result of the 6th legislature NA elections 2018 that the percentage of elected women MPs was only 15.20%, equal to 19 (immediately elected) of the total of 125 parliamentary seats and most of those were men (84.80%, equal to 106). Only the ruling CPP won all of the parliamentary seats in the vote (125 seats) and has female MPs. But the number of female MPs increased to 25 (20%) following resignation of a number of elected candidates, most of whom were men, following the formation of the new government.

Among the 15 capital-province constituencies where there were elected women, Phnom Penh and Svay Rieng province with four seats and Kampong Cham province with three seats, have more elected women than the rest of the country. In the contrast, the provinces with the highest percentage of elected women are Pailin province with 100% and Svay Rieng province with 80%. They are the followed by Kratie province with 66.66%, Kampong Chhnang with 50%, Phnom Penh with 33.33% and Kampong Cham province with 30%. Prey Veng and Kandal province are tied with the lowest percentage of 9.09%. (Please refer to Appendix 2 on the number and percentage of elected female by capital-province constituencies)

Compared to the 5th legislature of 2013, the number of elected women has decreased by 5.12% (6) for the 6th legislature of 2018, from 25 (20.32%) in the 5th legislature of 2013 to 19 (15.20%) in the 6th legislature of 2018 out of the total 125 elected candidates (immediately elected) but, after the new government was formed, the number of female MPs is up to 25 (20%), which is similar to the number of elected women for the 5th legislature of 2013.

According to the figures above, female candidates were still low in number, and the amount of elected women parliamentarians decreased with the change from the 5th legislature of 2013 to the 6th legislature of 2018. The continuing gender inequality is due to the following reasons: (1) A lack of political commitment from the parties, especially the party with the highest potential, namely CPP; (2) Continued discrimination against women during the candidate selection process and in the parties; (3) A lack of specific written policies, including articles in election laws for supporting and providing opportunities for women’s equal participation in the political sphere, especially as candidates in elections and to be elected; and (4) Failure to fulfill national obligations in accordance with the International Convention on Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women (CEDAW) which Cambodia has ratified since 1992. Furthermore, these were found that the popular parties, the ruling party and opposition party used political messages to criticize and tackle each other's politics to counteract their political activities and gain popularity as well as to keep their power during the 2018 NA Elections, even though the opposition party was dissolved and there was no opportunity to compete in the elections. This is reason why the popular parties failed to pay sufficient attention to promote women’s participation in politics in accordance with CEDAW and SDG commitments Cambodia has taken on. It also makes clear that violence against women in politics is currently ongoing in Cambodia.

Case Study 1

The Factor that motivated Ms. Prok Vanny to do enter politics was seeing that women were not have brave enough. Also, she aims to be a female activist who is a role model for women and inspires them to be brave.

Ms. Pok Vanny was the 2nd rank candidate for the Grassroots Democratic Party (GDP) in Kampong Cham constituency, which had a total of 10 contested seats in the 6th legislature of 2018. She was born in 1952 and was 66 years old. She was a contestant with a high level of education and more experience with social work, and she has been involved in developing policies to promote women.

She received education, training, and had a lot of work experiences before becoming a politician:

- Finished Bac II (High School)
- 1973 - 1975 Mathematics professor exam (study completed in 1980 and became a mathematics teacher at Baktouk High School, Phnom Penh)

- 1991 Bachelor degree in Mathematics
- 2002 - 2004 Master degree in Political Science and International Relations
- Participated in various training courses both local and abroad and have experiences such as:
 - Working for a US organization (PACT) as a project officer
 - Village survey
 - Working for UNIFEM (International Org.)
 - Learning about gender, PRA
 - Learning how to use strategies
 - Writing proposals and projects
 - Being a Moderator of Ceremony in the party political platform debates during election campaign periods for both the local and national elections in 2002 and 2008
 - Learn about leadership, public speaking, conflict resolution, and peace building...etc

The factors that motivated Mrs. Prok Vanny to participate in the political sphere were the observation that “Women were not have brave enough. And, the motivation to become a woman activist to be role model who inspires women to be brave” She also describes about GDP as a newly party and established as an initiative by Dr. KEM LEY with the approach that the existing parties do not seem to have sufficient capacity to properly set strategy, to write a good policy, or to get reports and information from people. In the meeting there were no women present, even though they were invited. Therefore, Ms. Prok Vanny was invited to participate by Dr. Kem Ley and through her experience working on as a member of Board of Directors for some NGOs. In 2017, she was involved with people who are members of the GDP to participate in a consultation with women in villages and communes about how women could participate in the society. She mentioned that “Women can do politics, Women can be prime minster”. She encouraged women to stand as candidates for commune/sangkat councilors and gave advice during the 2017 Commune Council Elections period on how to conduct election campaigning and leaflet dissemination. She was asked to stand as a candidate by commune/sangkat councilors, GDP members, and many women, so she decided to stand as a candidate and appointed as Head of the Commission for Conflict Resolution and Discipline in the GDP. She was elected by party’s members to stand as 2nd rank candidate in Kampong Cham province for the 6th legislature NA elections 2018. Moreover, she has advocated for placing women candidates who are at the lowest-rank to 3rd rank on the party list.

Ms. Prok Vanny described her challenges during the election campaign period, such as criticism or insults through social media, some of which were very hurtful. The other challenge was that her party has a little resources and money, but candidacy significant costs for things such as leaflets carrying out the campaign. In addition, when she went to the community to do campaigning, some citizens seem scared, they did not want to listen to my ideas and hurried away. Some citizens, especially young women and men, were not interested in knowing about the issues faced by the society.

Meanwhile, regarding the support from her family for standing as a candidate, she said: “At first my family did not want me to do politics, but because of they knew whatever I did was for the nation, and if I did not do it then who would? And if I’m remain scared, who’s leading? Some give ideas and some give money. And neighbors or friends are also supporters.

Her method to attract the support of the people: “Her team work talks to people directly to find ways to make people strong and more knowledgeable about the situation of politics and the nation, and how to exercise their rights as citizens. Also we explain people to make them aware the party is good so they will ask to join with us.”

Ms. Prok Vanny also special promised solutions for women’s and children’s issues during the election campaign. She said “If the party wins, the women will be promoted to enhance understanding and achieve equality with men. I will conduct more training for both women and men in order to aware that all forms of violence against women have to be reduced both within the family and society. Additionally, the GDP’s MPs, whether female or male must be at the grassroots, and have to know about the well-being of local residents, and whatever they need they can come to our MPs. The GDP’s MPs will not live in the City so women are able to meet them all the time.”

Case Study 2

The reasons Mrs. Va Sophy got involved in politics were: (1) In Cambodia, there is a low number of women who stand as candidates or as MPs. She wanted to increase the number of women, especially to achieve gender equality in politics and at decision-making levels. (2) She was distressed from having lived as a poor person that society does not care about and who is looked down on by others. (3) She saw illegal deforestation by powerful people as well as injustice in the society and significant insecurity.

Mrs. Va Sophy was the 1st rank candidate in Kratie constituency (with a total of three seats) from the Beehive Social Democratic Party (BSDP) for the 6th legislature of 2018.

She was born in 1964 in Prey Veng province, and became a candidate at the age of 54. But she was asked by the party president to stand as a candidate for the Kratie constituency. She had the following qualifications and work experience:

- Graduated from grade 7
- Attended training session of CEDAC on planting techniques (Techniques for growing agricultural crops)
- Educating people in her community

Mrs. Va Sophy had long maintained an ambition to get involved in politics, although she did not have political experience. She saw that “In Cambodia, there are not many women candidates in the party list or as MPs. She wished to increase more women in the political sphere, particularly to have gender equality in decision-making and promote women's equal rights with men.” She had a strong commitment to stand as a candidate in a political party. Other reasons Mrs. Va Sophy decided to participate in politics were: (1) She was distressed to live as a poor person, that was disregarded by others and looked down on; (2) she saw illegal deforestation by powerful people as well as injustice in the society and a lot of insecurity. She thought that only by getting involved in politics could she contribute to solve these problems and be able to stand tall, so she joined the BSDP, because the party has good policy and encourages women's political participation. She added that the support of her family was also a motivating factor, as well as respect and loving from other male candidates in the party.

Mrs. Va Sophy was an active candidate, and never failed to work with high commitment and made a strong contribution to the party. All these factors made her an outstanding candidate, and she was elected as the 1st rank candidate for the BSDP.

“I have faced discrimination by some people who are dissatisfied with me and hold contempt because they think that women should not be involved in politics. They say it’s not good for women and threatened on me to pressure me to stop my campaign or restrict my actions” Mrs. Va Sophy said. However, she was supported by her relatives and family, and this motivated her to continue working in politics.

Her method to attract support from the people was helping people directly with solving problems that were happening such as land conflicts, natural disasters that knock down homes, fire house fires, as well as digging wells and water canals for the people. In all these areas, she got significant support from the people. Prior to standing as a candidate, she worked as a Permanent Committee Member of the BSDP.

She promised that, if selected as a MP for the 6th legislature of 2018: “I am going to help women, children, elderly people, and the people with disabilities by accelerating solutions to the problems they are facing. Moreover, I will be encouraging more women to participate in the political sphere. More women as leaders, and women’s and children’s issues are resolved sequentially.”

Ms. Va Sophy recommended: (1) Calling on Cambodian women be brave enough to get involved more in politics. Not only in political parties, but in all sectors of society, especially in the main institutions, they should stand up to defend their equal treatment. As well, women have to study more to be role models, in order for the next generation to have a clear understanding about issues in the society and solving problems together; (2) Women vote for women in order to increase women’s political participation towards gender equality because if there are more women representatives, social issues will be resolved more peacefully than as with men who always use force to solve problems, so the situation of women and children will also improve.

3. National Political Platforms of Political Parties on Women’s and Children’s Issues

During the official election campaign period for the 6th legislature NA elections 2018 which lasted for 21 days, from 07-27 July 2018, all twenty political parties actively campaigned to showcase their political platform to voters, in relation to leading and developing capital-provinces and the nation, including their political platforms on women’s and children’s issues.

The main point and promises of the political platforms outlined below were extracted from the NEC bulletin, released on July 13, 2018, No. 3 on “Policies of political parties during their campaign for the 6th legislature NA elections”. Additional sources include the political platform of the Grassroots Democratic Party (GDP), the political platform of the Cambodian Youth Party (CYP) for the election 2017-2018, and the statement by Samdech Moha Sena Padei Techo HUN SEN, in the opening remark of the election campaign on July 7, 2018 as well as female volunteer citizens reporting for COMFREL on “women’s political participation in the 6th legislature NA elections 2018”. It also is based on information from female candidates and male candidates in COMFREL’s target areas which consisted of 20 communes/sangkat, of 10 districts/khan, of 5 provinces (including Kampong Thom, Kampong Cham, Kampong Chhnang, Takeo and Preah Vihear).

Table 8: National Political Platforms of Political Parties to Solve Women’s and children’s Issues

The table below shows more attention should be paid by political parties related to solving women’s and children’s issues in their political platforms.

Note: There are 7 political parties that have no political platforms initiatives related to solving women’s and children’s issues including KWP, CNP, DP, LDP, OMP, KRP, and CIPDP.

4. Female Members of NEC, PEC, CEC, PSC/BCC

There were still very few women working in election management positions at all levels for the 6th legislature NA elections 2018.

National

There were no woman among the nine members of the National Election Committee (NEC), but there were 119 women, equal to 23.47% of the total of 507 people, working staff at the NEC’s cabinet. This was an increase of 5.03% (55), compared to the 5th legislature of 2013 when there were only 64 women, equaling 18.44%.

Sub-national

At the same time, the number of women is still low in the sub-national election commissions: there were 121 women, equal to 12.38% out of a total 977 staff working at Capital/Provincial Election Commissions (PEC). This was a slightly decrease of 1% (3), when compared to the 5th legislature NA elections 2013 with 124 women, equaling 13.38%.

However, the number of women increased slightly by 0.79% (92) in the Commune Election Commissions (CEC) a change from 1,195, equal to 14.64% in the 5th legislature of 2013 to 1,287, equaling 15.43% out of a total 8,338 for the 6th legislature of 2018.

Polling Station and Ballot Counting

Surprisingly, there were more women at the lower levels: there were 63,968 women, equal to 43.32% out of a total 147,633 polling station officials (PSOs) working at the Polling Station Commissions (PSCs) and Ballot Counting Commissions (BCCs). This increased slightly by 1.31% (16,055) compared to the 5th legislature of 2013 when there were 47,913 women, equal to 42.01%. Notably, the number of women working at PSCs and BCCs kept increasing from the 4th legislature of 2008 with 32.29%, to the 5th legislature of 2013 with 42.01%, and the 6th legislature of 2018 with 43.32%.

5. Women Observers and Female Political Party Agents

For the 6th legislature NA elections in 2018, local NGOs, some foreign embassies which were approved by NEC, and political parties deployed their observers and representatives to polling station offices in commune/sangkat of the capital city and provinces in order to observe and monitor the election process. However, reputed independent non-governmental organizations (NGOs) which work on election monitoring, including: COMFREL, NICFEC and TI refused to deploy observers. The Japanese government and some European Union members did not send their observers to monitor

Cambodia's elections as well. According to the official figures of NEC, the number of local and international observers and political party agents were as follow:⁶

❖ Female National Observers

The NEC officially accredited National Observers of the NGOs Associations in the amount 79,612 from 112 institutions to monitor the election process for the 6th legislature NA elections on Sunday, July 29, 2018. The total number of national observers increased by 39,470, compared to the 5th legislature of 2013 when there was only 40,142.

❖ Female International Observers

Regarding the registration of International Election Observers, the NEC officially accredited 322 persons from 42 countries, institutions, and embassies, including AIPA-APA-ICAPP-CDI-EUROPEAN COUNCIL TOURISM and TRADE-EUROPEAN COUNCIL ON INTERNATIONAL

Unfortunately, the figures did not specify the number of female observers for monitoring the election.

⁷ Major civil society organizations that monitor the elections decided against observation due to restrictions on freedoms and rights of civil society organizations, making people afraid of being accused of participating in serious crimes against the state by pursuing revolution.

For the 6th legislature NA elections in 2018, Transparency International Cambodia (TI) announced that its observers would not be deployed for the election due to the political environment and political conditions during the preceding few months. As a result it could not mobilize sufficient human resources to meaningfully participate in the upcoming election.

⁶Press released of NEC on National and International observers on July 26, 2018 and the official result of political party agents for the 6th legislature NA elections on July 18, 2018

⁷Radio Free Asia (RFA) broadcast on June 20, 2018

Two major electoral monitoring non-governmental organizations, including the Committee for Free and Fair Elections in Cambodia (COMFREL) and the Neutral and Impartial Committee for Free and Fair Elections in Cambodia (NICFEC), also announced that they would not conduct election observation on July 29 for the same reason. A COMFREL officer told RFA that the reason for not taking part in the election was the prohibition on and threats of legal action against the Situation Room NGO coalition for election monitoring, a grouping of more than 40 organizations-associations which were accused in 2017 of participating in the spread of color revolution.

The spokesman for the NEC Dr. Hang Puthea, told the RFI on June 20, 2018 that the absence of observers from NGOs would not affect the accuracy of the vote.

Small parties have also express their concerns about the lack of election observers.

❖ Female Political Party Agents

The Titular Political Party Agents
Total Female-Male	Female
	#	%
51,575	11,241	21.79%

6. Female Voters

There was a total of 8,380,217 eligible voters on the official voter list of which 4,470,864 were eligible female voters, equal to 53.35% for the 6th legislature NA elections 2018. Voter turnout was only 6,956,900, equal to 83.02% of the total voters, with more women than men voting on Sunday, July 29, 2018.⁸

According to COMFREL's female volunteer citizens in four target provinces (Kampong Cham, Kampong Chhnang, Kampong Thom and Takeo) it was found that during the election campaign and cooling day period, there were some irregularities affecting women such a CPP village chief telling villagers to vote for the CPP and teaching people to choose number 20 on.

⁸The official result of the number of voters for the 6th legislature NA Elections on Sunday, 29 July 2018 was released by the NEC on August 15, 2018

In other cases, women were threatened by their husbands, and forced to support his favored party. There were active pressure by the village chiefs of the CPP to bring people together to teach them how to choose the ruling party and correctly mark number 20 on the ballot. It was also found that of the 65 women that been interviewed, 46.15% did not vote and 53.84% voted for the following reasons:

The 46.16% of women that did not vote claimed that they did not want to go to vote for the following reasons:
Loss of Khmer identity card
They are worried about the future, because there are no indelible ink on their finger so they point out that they did not go to polls.
No preferred political party
Did not have enough documents
Immigration
Did not register as they work far away
Elections not fair due to the absence of the CNRP
They were discriminated against by the authorities, and not given money like other people
Think that if they did not go to vote, the CPP would still win the election
Went to vote but was not on time
Did not support the 6 th legislature NA elections in 2018

The 53.84% of women that did vote claimed that they voted for following reasons:
Not happy to vote but felt it was their duty
Wanted to make change to develop the country
Fear of war because they have experienced difficulties
To fulfill obligations as a good citizen
Gifts to the people and money 20,000 Riels to 30,000 Riels as well as solidary food gathering motivated them to participate
To have indelible ink on their finger because it was demanded at their workplace
Went to show their face because the village chief monitored and listed the voters at the polling station
Wanted to vote to choose their favorite leader
Do not want to be accused of being opposition supporter
Civil servants were required to vote to avoid pressure at work
Because it is a habit to vote for every mandate

III. Conclusion and Summary

Female candidates are still low in number and the amount of elected women to parliament decreasing from the 5th legislature of 2013 to the 6th legislature of 2018. The inequality and negative trend were due to a lack of political commitment from the parties, especially the party with the highest potential, namely the CPP., Observation and analysis has found continued discrimination against women during the candidate selection process in the parties, and lack of specific written policies, including no specific articles in election laws for supporting and providing opportunities for women’s equal participation with men in the political sphere, especially as candidates to be elected. Furthermore, the popular parties, the ruling party and major opposition party used political messages to criticize each other's politics to counteract their political activities and gain popularity for the 2018 NA Elections. For this is reason the Parties overlooked the issue of promoting women’s participation in politics in accordance with CEDAW and SDG commitments Cambodia has taken on. It also made clear that violence against women in politics continues Cambodia.

More attention has to be paid by political parties related to advancing on women’s and children’s issues outlined in the political platforms for the 6th legislature National Assembly.

More women voters turned out to vote than men on Sunday July 29, 2018. Among 65 total women interviewed, there 46.15% did not vote and 53.84% voted. For the 46.15% that did not vote, it was because of reasons and concerns such as lost Khmer identity card, no political party they liked, did not have enough documents, immigration, did not register as they work far away, elections not fair due to the absence of the opposition CNRP, discrimination by the authorities, not given money like other people, the rulling party would win even if they did not vote and they did not support the 6th legislature NA elections 2018. For the 53.84% that voted it was because of reasons such as: fulfilling citizen obligation, wanting to make changes to develop the country, fear of war because after having experienced difficulties, vote buying by donation to the people 20,000 Riels to 30,000 Riels and gave them an incentive, to have indelible ink on their finger because it was demanded at their workplace and civil servants were required to vote, otherwise they would be pressured or exclude at work.

IV. Recommendations

To improve gender equality and women’s political empowerment, the following measures should be taken:

1. Determining Affirmative Action in Electoral Laws

“Affirmative action” is an effective solution to encourage all political parties to place female candidates on the party list. The political parties should be encouraged to implement reforms to the legal framework by amending electoral laws. The law can be improved establishing criteria to the political party’s candidate registration procedure requiring the use of a sandwich system from the top to bottom for ranking on the political party candidate list. There should also be an amendment to the Law on Elections of Members of National Assembly (LEMNA) Chapter 4, new Article 37 “the list of candidates in each constituency has to use sandwich system from top to bottom between women candidates and men candidates.” And the Law on Elections of Members of Commune Council (LEMCC) Chapter 7, new Article 49 “candidate lists of each political party must alternate female candidates and male candidates from the top to bottom ranking.” This is needed to ensure that women stand as candidates in equal proportion and importance on each political party list by alternate candidate between female and male from the top to bottom. This is a needed affirmative action to achieve genuine gender equality.

2. Eliminate of all Forms of Discriminations Against Women

Providing opportunities to women and eliminating of all forms of discriminations in order to promote and improve women’s political participation. Ensure equality of male and female elected representatives, and equal access to political power at both local and national levels.

3. Capacity Development for Women

It is necessary to encourage female candidates and elected females through capacity development that increases their confidence and work effectiveness after being elected. Additionally, there should be training provided to potential women leaders and the next generation of female political activists.

4. Good Political Environment

Enhance the political environment and ensure the safety of women, especially women candidates. The RGC, local authorities, and the NEC should continue to implement special measures to prevent intimidation and violence against female voters, female candidates, and female political activists.

5. Sharing Information through Media

Information must be accessible to people nationwide through the media. The media has a responsibility to share information and broadcast it to the public, particularly local communities, on the importance and role of women in politics and elections, as well as on the duties and achievements of women before and during their term in office, in relation to their decision-making, leadership and resource management. It is also necessary to increase the effectiveness of transferring information and educating citizens on the role of female MPs in the National Assembly, their responsibilities and administrative power under the law. Only in this way will citizens become more aware of the power and potential of female representatives.

6. Strengthening of law enforcement

The strengthening of legislative power and law enforcement and to achieve independence and betterment of the judicial system to protect women from all forms of gender based violence including violence against women in politics as well to abolish the culture of impunity that exist around these crimes and to punish those who abuse women’s roles and duties.

7. High commitment of political parties

Political parties have to be committed to achieving sustainable development goals. Both the ruling party and the opposition parties must have a high commitment to providing opportunities for women to stand as candidates and to be elected at a rate equal to men in accordance with CEDAW and SDGs. Even if they are divided on political views and are trying to maintain competitiveness or popularity in order to gain power and to win the election, parties must not fail to promote women’s equal participation.
